

R&Ks Nearby and Faraway Mis-Adventures: From Visiting Frogs to Foreboding Vacations

Americans love activity. Weekends are packed with activities; holidays become triggers for hurried and hectic mini-vacations. Even longer vacations are often times for feverish activity and not relaxation. Americans work at work and they work at play. These short stories, based on actual events, relate both good and bad adventures that befell modern suburbanites caught in the grips of the American ethos of work and more work. Some stories tell of great vacations but others describe less satisfactory ones. Nature presents unexpected challenges too: frogs, storms, earthquakes. Biblical phenomena? No! Life in modern Suburbia! Perhaps you can relate or at least commiserate with these modern mis-adventurers.
