

Love this Child

This has been the most important story that I could ever write, but the most draining to me mentally. As Robbies adoptive mom, it has been a tearing away of myself to see my real motives and feelings for him. His life has taught me much, but it has come at a personal cost to me. I am a nurturer by nature, like the many women in my family who came before me. Reactive Attachment Disordered children cannot handle nurturing on any level as they get to the teen years. This placed my natural desires at odds with my own child. This is quite a concept that many do not understand. Many people have said that all Robbie needs is love, as if my husband and I have never tried this option. What they do not understand is love is what is driving him away from us, his parents. But in our own way we are still trying, because we too believe that love is what he truly needs. This is why we cannot just give him back to the adoption agency. He needs us. This is why the title of this book is called, Love this Child. As a Quaker sitting in a unprogrammed service (no pastor just quiet), I would pray for Gods intervention on behalf of Robbies escalating concerns and the Holy Spirit would encourage me to love this child. Then I would say, How do I love this child when he . The message never changed as I would pray for guidance from God each week. What I did not understand at the time and know now is that it takes love to raise these children. You have to be truly committed to them and their needs to get through the day-to-day living with them. I just wanted something more, I guess, as I prayed and then listened for the Holy Spirits leading.
