

Management and Organisation Development: Beyond Arrows, Boxes and Circles

Management development has become a key issue for many companies to ensure that managers have the key skills and competencies required for future strategic development and success in a rapidly changing environment. This text is based upon the design and delivery of programmes to a range of clients and the approach that management learning and development and organization learning and development are the same process or two sides of the same coin. It is also based upon the view that this learning about management and organizations must go beyond the superficial treatment with arrows, boxes and circles on a flipchart to the deeper, more complex underlying processes.
