

OECD Economic Surveys: France 2013

Table of Content :Executive summaryAssessment and Recommendations-In the short term growth is set to remain weak and unemployment to rise further -French banks have been resilient, but they suffer from some vulnerabilities-Reducing the weight of public spending must be vigorously pursued-The strengthening of the budgetary framework is welcome -Improving the equity and efficiency of the tax and transfer system -Frances poor export performance reflects generalised weakness on the supply side -Boosting competition in product markets -Reforming the labour market -Improving the economic situation of young people-Bibliography-Annex. Progress in structural reform Chapter 1. The efficiency and equity of the tax and transfer system-Income inequality is relatively low, thanks to redistribution, and has been stable over time -The French tax system is complex, changes frequently and induces serious distortions -The taxation of labour is heavy despite substantial targeted measures -Joint family income taxation may discourage female labour force participation-Incentives for older workers to keep working can be further improved -The mobility of high-income earners will limit the revenue yield of raising the top marginal tax rate.-The taxation of capital-Reduced VAT rates are an inefficient way to redistribute income -A large dispersion of implicit carbon prices but good progress in internalising local pollution-The transfer system should be simplified-Conditionality of unemployment benefits should be strengthened -Social transfers should be focused on getting beneficiaries into jobs -Disability benefits are a potential channel of benefit substitution-Family benefits are tilted towards those having at least three children-The design of the parental leave allowance may push low-skill mothers into an inactivity trap-Housing subsidies should be better integrated with the rest of the transfer system -Old-age pension complexity should be reduced to facilitate necessary systemic reforms -Survivors pensions lower female participation and discriminate against private-sector pensioners and unmarried people-In-kind benefits: health-care and education services-BibliographyChapter 2. Improving the economic situation of young people -The priority for the Presidents term of office -Starting from an already unfavourable position, young people have been hit by the crisis-Enhancing the autonomy of young people-Combating failure at school -Young people in the higher education system-Promoting youth employment and facilitating school-to-work transition -Territorialisation of the issues affecting youths -Bibliography
