COMING HERE: Learning to Live in America, How to adapt and succeed in the U.S., by Rezzan Erten is a gem of a book. Currently a contracting officer for the U.S. Government, Ms. Erten came here at the age of 7 from Turkey. Between then and now, she completed her formal education with a Bachelors Degree in French and a Masters Degree in Public Administration, held other important jobs in the U.S. Government and private industry, and raised a family all while learning how to adapt and succeed in the U.S. In what might be a private conversation, the author shares the distilled treasures and wisdom of her own life experiences with the reader. The attentive reader will find answers to the many questions that come up in adjusting to life in the United States. This is a book that should be in the hands of every prospective visitor to the U.S., both short and long term. There is information for those who are just beginning to consider the move as well as for those who are already here. There is help for the student, the academic researcher, the business professional, the householder, the house guest in short, for every person.
