Not illustrated. 1720 Excerpt: ...hand, we find that good Men in their most solemn Praises and Thanksgivings, have made very serious Reflections upon their own Unworthiness. And surely the best way to make Men truly thankful, is first to make them very humble. When David makes his most solemn Acknowledgments to God for his great Mercies to him, how doth he abase himself before him: But who am I, and what is my People? And so likewise after he had summed all the Powers and Faculties of his Soul to join in the Praises of God, he interposeth this seasonable Meditation, He hath not dealt with us after our Sins, nor rewarded us according to our Iniquities. The greater and more lively Sense we have of the Goodness of God to us, the more we shall abhor our selves in Dust and Ashes; nothing being more apt to melt us into Tears of Repentance, than the Consideration of great and undeserved Mercies vouchsafed to us. The Goodness of God doth naturally lead to Repentance. Having thus reconciled the Text to the present Occasion, I shall for the more distinct handling of the Words take notice of these two Parts in them. First, Here is a Case supposed; should we, after all that is come upon us for our evil Deeds, and since God hath punished us less than our Iniquities deserve, and hath given us such a Deliverance as this should we again break his Commandments. Secondly, Here is a Sentence and Determination in the Case; Wouldst thou not be angry with us till thou hadst consumed us, so that there should be no remnant nor escaping? This is not spoken doubtfully, though it be put by way of Question? but is the more vehemently positive, the more peremptorily affirmative; as if he had said, it cannot otherwise be in reason expected, but that after such repeated Provocations, God shoul...
